NO ONE WILL HEAR YOU SCREAM A psychotic killer terrorizing a small mountain town sets his sights on those hunting him. Special Agent Cody Thomas, from the FBI's Violent Crimes Unit in Los Angeles, decides to take a week off in the small mountain town of Big Bear. Do a little fishing, a little hiking. HE'S WATCHING Deputy Jilly Reid left the Central Homicide Unit of San Bernardino and moved up the mountain to her hometown to get away from death and the devastating things people do to one another. Handing out parking tickets all day is just fine with her. No sooner does Cody hit the town when he runs into Jilly, a girl he knew in high school. But there's no time to reminisce, she's in a hurry. An incoherent call came into dispatch. A fisherman down in Hunters Cove is carrying on about finding dead women. A lot of them. HE'S WAITING Cody joins Jilly on the call. What they find doesn't belong in the sleepy little town. An underwater graveyard. A deranged killer used the lake as a dump site. Seven mutilated bodies. Chained by their feet to cinder blocks. Fish food. Completely unrecognizable. The only assumption is they're women because of their long flowing tresses waving back and forth in the current. Their distorted faces set in a silent scream for all eternity. HE'S PISSED The victims had obviously been in the water for some time, so naturally Cody and Jilly think the killer is long gone. Until he begins taunting them. He's out there watching their every move and letting them know he could take them out whenever he wants. Then women begin disappearing at an alarming rate. YOU'RE DEAD Now they must stop this sadistic killer or die trying.
