1-3

A page by page reproduction of the 3rd issue of the legendary pulp magazine - featuring the entire 70,000 word sequel to Gail's "Shot Into Infinity," a pair of long novelettes by two of the women authors who were helping shape the face of science fiction, a rare, early story by Frank Belknap Long - and all the original illustrations, vintage advertisements - with the uncut letter column.

In Otto Willi Gail's endlessly fascinating novel, "The Stone from the Moon," the famed astronomer mixes hard scientific extrapolation about space travel, space stations and space mirrors, with Blavatskyan Theosophical speculations. "Via the Hewitt Ray" may be "Miss" (as she styled herself in one letter) F. M. Rupert's (as she signed the story) single venture into science fiction writing but it was judged outstanding by the readers of the era, a judgment confirmed by its many reprintings over the years. Clare Winger Harris presents "The Ape Cycle," a story that challenges us all to ask just where we fall short in our attempts to envision a better life. And, among the standout short stories is legendary Weird Tales writer Frank Belknap Long's hair-raising "The Thought Materializer." Look for letters from the youthful Raymond A. Palmer and Forrest J. Ackerman, among others. The next best thing to owning the pulp yourself.
