A US sporting legend. The biggest doping scandal in history. And a woman who refused to be silenced.

Irish born Emma O'Reilly joined the US Postal team as a soigneur in 1997 working closely with Lance Armstrong. The pair formed a friendship while Armstrong beat the odds to go onto win the Tour de France. But as he secured a place as one of America's biggest sporting legends Emma felt forced to turn a blind eye to life behind the scenes of pro-cycling and its endemic doping problems.

Years later after Emma left the sport, her conscience struggled with the knowledge pro-cyclists, including Marco Pantani, were dying because of drugs. Now by not speaking out Emma began to feel like part of the problem. It was then she agreed to speak to Sunday Times journalist David Walsh who'd been investigating doping for years.

But instead of cleaning up the sport, Emma found herself labeled a whistleblower and dismissed as a liar. Faced with a £1million legal bill she stood to lose everything, just for telling the truth. Including a foreword from Lance Armstrong himself, this book is a must-read for all cycling fans, revealing the ultimate story of responsibility, betrayal, morality and forgiveness.
