Everyone sees what you seem to be, few realise what you really are believed Machiavelli... I paint not what I see but what I feel , said Picasso... We become ethical as soon as we are unhappy, according to Marcel Proust... We are constantly coming across untranslated and unattributed quotations in foreign languages, and it is often impossible to discover just what they mean or where they originated. These books have the answer.

The quotes combine the familiar with the irresistible, the poetic with the political, the wise with the witty. From authors to statesmen, artists to kings, emperors to satirists, there is something here for everyone. But there is no such thing as a quick dip into this book; vastly entertaining as well as endlessly useful, the dictionary will draw the reader from treasure to treasure, provoking new thoughts on every page. Now you can learn whether Marie Antoinette really told the poor to eat cake; find out what Mussolini said about making the trains run on time; discover who it was who said I ve no time to be tired .
